Former Winnipeg Pastor In Israel Calls Eichmann "The Hardest Man"

"He is the hardest man I ever saw." In these words, the Rev. William Hull, now spiritual adviser to Adolf Eichmann, wrote to relatives in Winnipeg of the enormous challenge of "wakening the conscience" of the man convicted of participating in the murder of 6,000,000 European Jews during World War II.

Mr. Hull, pastor of the Zion Christian Mission in Jerusalem, has twice visited Eichmann in his cell in Jerusalem, says Ann Henry, of Winnipeg, in the New York Herald Tribune, where the former Nazi SS (Elite Guard) official is waiting the result of his appeal to the Israeli Supreme Court against the death sentence. Eichmann, who at first refused to see the Protestant clergyman, now has a Bible and has agreed to accept "spiritual advice," Mr. Hull said.

A niece of Mr. Hull, Mrs. Patricia Kerr, now of Vancouver but visiting in Winnipeg, said her uncle wrote several letters to his wife's sister and her husband, Mr. and Mrs. E. Harold Anderson, of Winnipeg, during the trial. He told of the "tears in the courtroom," the "people passing out with the horror of what they heard", and of Eichmann, who sat "apparently unmoved."

"If ever a trial by man was justified this one surely is, and Israel had led the way, not in a spirit of revenge but in fulfilling a sacred trust and obligation," Mr. Hull wrote.

"He is the hardest man I ever saw. He seems unconscious of any wrong doing. He seems to think that he was eliminating a people who should be eliminated."

Mrs. Kerr said her uncle hopes to awaken the conscience of Eichmann "before he meets the judgment of God in the next world." Mr. Hull is revered by the Israelis, Mrs. Kerr said. A book by him, "The Fall and Rise of Israel," pictures on the cover Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion, to whom the book is dedicated, being interviewed by Mr. Hull, says the New York Herald Tribune. He was the Christian clergyman chosen by Israeli authorities to attend the Eichmann trial, and has since written about it in a number of articles.

Mr. Hull, born in Winnipeg and educated at private schools, was ordained a minister of the Pentecostal Church but left to go to Palestine in 1935, where he opened his non-denominational mission.

"I think my uncle believes—I know he believes—that the emergence of the state of Israel is a Biblical prophecy come true," Mrs. Kerr said. "That is why he went there."

Of the greatest single challenge of his ministerial career, the "saving of Eichmann's soul," Mr. Hull wrote: "Can God forgive this man? If Adolf Eichmann is found guilty by the court and sentenced to death he must die. Will death end it all?"

Death would not be the end, Mr. Hull wrote, because "the judgment of God must come to Adolf Eichmann after his death, and it is this he must fear more than the sentence passed in the courtroom."

His first meeting with Eichmann on April 11 lasted half an hour and dealt only with spiritual matters in relation to "his soul and future judgment," Mr. Hull said. At the second meeting, which lasted nearly an hour, Eichmann and the minister, discussed the meaning of St. John's words, "For God so loved the world He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life," says the New York Herald Tribune. The minister said he intends to continue his visits to Eichmann, but the dates of his future calls will be kept secret.

Publisher Of "The Forward" Gave Of Himself To U.S. Life

Alexander Kahn, labor lawyer and general manager and publisher for many years of The Jewish Daily Forward, famous Yiddish-language newspaper, in New York, died in New York hospital. He was 80 years old.

Mr. Kahn, who lived at 802 West Twelfth Street, was a founder and vice president of the Liberal party and had been an unsuccessful candidate for various offices under that banner, and before that under those of the American Labor and Socialist parties.

In an eightieth birthday interview, he recalled raising funds in 1897 as a member of the Socialist Literary Society to help found The Forward, says the New York Times. He became general counsel to the Forward Association, a non-profit organization that runs the paper, in 1903, and general manager in 1939.

In the Nineteen Twenties and early Thirties The Forward had a circulation of 220,000. This has dwindled to 77,000, a decline that Mr. Kahn attributed to a reduced demand for Yiddish and other foreign-language newspapers.

On his last birthday, Mr. Kahn received a portfolio of letters from prominent persons that included a greeting from President Kennedy. He also received from Mayor Wagner at City Hall a citation for distinguished service to the city.

Mr. Kahn made outstanding contributions to the nation's community and political life after arriving on the lower East Side from Russia more than seventy years ago. He was a founder, vice chairman, and legal adviser of the American Joint Distribution Committee; a director of the Workmen's Circle; and a corporation officer of radio station WEVD.

Leniency Appeals To Soviet By World Personalities Failed To Save Death List Of Jews

In violation of its own laws, Russia has condemned at least twenty-four Soviet citizens to die before firing squads for so-called economic offenses. At least 16 of the doomed, previously believed to number twenty, are Jews. They were punished under a law passed after the commission of their crimes — in other words, it was ex-post-facto punishment.

As disclosed in the New York Herald Tribune, the Soviet regime has carried out at least five executions. Some sources believe many or all the others have already been shot.

A clear ban against ex-post-facto punishment, or increase in punishment, is specifically set forth in Article 6 of the "principles of criminal legislation of the USSR and the Union republics," which was ratified by the Supreme Soviet on the law operating at the time the crime was committed.

2. "A law that eliminates punishability for an act or reduces punishment is retroactive, that is, it applies to acts committed before it was promulgated.

3. "A law that establishes punishability for an act or increases punishment is not retroactive." (that is, shall have no retroactive effect).

Trials of the economic offenders, for the most part, took place last Fall and Winter and were given unusually wide publicity in the Russian provincial press. Specialists in Soviet affairs noted that it was not until May 5, 1961, that the Supreme Soviet, Russia's nominally highest governing body, decreed the death sentence for pilfering state and public property.

Currency speculation was designated as a capital crime on July 1, 1961, and bribery on February 27, 1962, says the New York Herald Tribune. The firing squads did their grisly work despite leniency appeals to Soviet Premier Nikita S. Khrushchev from such widely known personalities as Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Norman Thomas, Martin Buber, Francois Mauriac, and Bertrand Russell.

It was learned that a joint appeal signed by Lord Russell, Mr. Buber, and Mr. Mauriac was cabled to the Kremlin early in March. Mrs. Roosevelt sent a personal letter to the Soviet Prime Minister.

Other public expressions of condemnation over the imposition of capital punishment for alleged crimes, treated far more leniently in other countries, have come from Episcopal Bishop James Pike and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Soviet experts in New York believe that Russia has chosen to run afoul of world public opinion and compromise its own laws against retroactive court proceedings for two main reasons:

1. By singling out Jews as the prime culprits, the Communist regime seeks to exploit endemic Russian anti-Semitism as an educative device to combat widespread practices among the Soviet masses—dealing in currency speculation, black marketing, selling goods on a private basis, and trading in gold and jewelry.

2. An atmosphere of isolation and terror for Russia's 3,000,000 Jews is thereby engendered, intensifying Russia's campaign to atomize its Jewish community, which it regards with suspicion because of communal ties to Israel and the West.

The following have been sentenced to death in the Soviet Union for currency and economic offences, says the New York Herald Tribune. All are known to be Jews, with the possible exception of those whose names are starred.

Begelman, D.; sentenced to death by shooting—Moscow.

Biller, Shmuel Leib; sentenced to death by shooting for currency speculation.

N.Y. College Proud Of 400 Who Heard Out U.S. Nazi

Four hundred students of Hunter College in the Bronx listened with what their dean called in admiration "perfect parliamentary decorum" to an exposition of American Nazism, by a stand-in for its founder, George Lincoln Rockwell.

Hundreds of mounted and foot policemen and detectives guarded the college's campus in the Bedford Park area between Paul and Gouldon Avenues to protect three aides of Rockwell from survivors of Nazi death camps and other pickets, says the New York Times. Mr. Rockwell, who faces arrest for disorderly conduct on a court warrant, remained in New Jersey.

The police provided areas behind barricades where pickets could protest Rockwell's appearance or his doctrines with sign and voice. Two groups of more than a thousand each took part in the protests.

The substitute lecturer was Seth D. Ryan, who said he was a "captain" under "Commander Rockwell." He was accompanied by Roy James, a "lieutenant," and Schuyler Ferris, a "trooper."

The meeting had been arranged by a student group, the Competency party, as the first of a series of representatives of splinter organizations "out of the mainstream" of American politics.

Harry L. Levy, dean of students, later complimented the students as

Same Twins Rank First And Second For Third Semester At Fordham

Identical twins ranked first and second in a class of 195 for the third consecutive semester at the Fordham University School of Business.

They are 20-year-old Douglas Philip and Kenneth Harvey Fields, of Livingston, N.J., both sophomores, says the New York Times. When the assistant dean of the school, the Rev. William E. Boyle, announced the grades and standings of the sophomore group, the record showed Douglas first with a 3.93 index, and equivalent of a 98.25 average, and Kenneth second with 3.92, or 98.

Last year, however, Kenneth had a 3.95 index and Douglas a 3.86. Why the switch? "Overconfidence," says Douglas. "Kenneth just let up and I overtook him." The twins say this closeness in academic standings has been the pattern ever since they began their education, fourteen years ago at the Bergen School in Jersey City.

"We feel we have a responsibility to the work and to ourselves," Kenneth says. "We work at a subject until we're satisfied we know everything perfectly."

The twins, whose family also has lived in Maplewood and Millburn, were anxious to go to college in New York. They chose Fordham because it "would broaden our experience and make us familiar

Moe Guttman, The Last Hours Of A Servant Of The Montreal Jewish Community

The writer of the following wishes it to be unsigned:

This is not in the nature of a tribute or of a eulogy. It is rather a memento of a few hours in the life of a citizen who took pride in his station as servant of the Montreal Jewish community. This community deserves to have a factual record of these several hours of his life; neither he nor any one other mortal knew they were his last:

Moe Guttman was a businessman, with all the responsibilities and pressures of the world weighing down upon the active vice-president of a company. But he was also, and simultaneously, one of the fathers of the St. Laurent Jewish community, one of the bearers of the fragile, elusive vision of a dignified, orderly, spiritually luxurious life for the Jewry of his suburb; he was one of the builders of a rising and blossoming synagogue, the focal centre of vigor for a youth movement brimming and seething. He was one of the devoted souls who made certain by the service and labour and anxiety which he gave each moment that Jewish Library service be available to every resident of "his" St. Laurent.

This particular morning there were many telephone calls to be made and answered. Systematically the connections were made one after another, and most of them dealt with a space problem that was facing the William Wise Memorial branch of the Jewish Public Library; the problem arose out of the current happy disarrangements due to the building program of his Beth Ora Synagogue. Eventually, only when the plan for a solution was already emerging in his mind, he called the director of the Library:

"You know, we have this problem. I want you to know about it, and this is what I have done . . . This is what I asked Mr. Small to do, and I told Mrs. Field about this . . . Don't worry about it, housing is our obligation, and we shall meet it. I don't know how yet. There may be some costs involved. Can I count on your participation?"

When he received prompt assurance, without reference to red tape and complex consultations, he was pleased. His relief clearly reflected more than the usual appreciation of the cooperative attitude. He found satisfaction in the harmony he elicited from others he worked with in the community. He took especial personal pride in the enthusiasm which he witnessed in what may have been the favorite of his community projects, the Beth Ora branch of the Library which he set on foot. He took an artistic delight in the human qualities of the people he worked with and prided himself upon eliciting such wholesome devotion for his causes. He found joy in the knowledge that his presence and participation radiated and evoked this spirit of dedication about him.

It was in this spirit that he was so busy those hours until a brief twinge sublimated this Obadiah of St. Laurent from this world of our life to a more universal sphere. In the world's busy hours no one finds occasion, time, or sense in pausing to tell a Moe Guttman that they know who he is and that they find high experience in his presence. The same binding social conventions permitted Montreal Jewry to say everything by their presence at one of the longest cortèges in its annals.

having upheld Hunter's "honor before the world."

Ryan said his party was composed of fifty or sixty at Arlington, Va., and at other centers in Chicago and Los Angeles, training to be an elite officer corps. He asserted it had 3,000 to 4,000 subscribers and upward of 10,000 correspondents.

He said the party believed that the white race, in which it did not include members of the Jewish faith, was the bearer of civilization, that the races should be strictly separated, that capitalism should be replaced by national socialism or a system he called "free enterprise", and that government should be authoritarian.

A thin-faced, highly-strung man in his early twenties, Ryan told the students that his party favored execution in the gas chamber of all whom it considered "Communists," a class in which he included President Kennedy, as well as all "traitors," a group in which he included right-wing leaders as well as all who did not support his party's fight on what it considered "communism."

At the close detectives spirited the three men to the city line, the pickets departed, and decorum prevailed on the campus.

with religious teachings other than our own." The Fields twins are Jewish.

As for future plans upon their graduation in 1964, Douglas is considering law school, and Kenneth graduate work in business. In their first year at Fordham, they both took English, speech, theology, management, marketing, finance, economics, and accounting. Douglas' major fields are finance and management; Kenneth's accounting and management.

As for hobbies, Douglas prefers weight-lifting, chess, and intramural sports, and Kenneth, gymnastics and riflery. Both are influential in the school's debate society and belong to the Society for the Advancement of Management.

During the summer, the twins learn the hardware business at the Skilleman Hardware Manufacturing Company in Trenton. Their father, Emanuel Fields, 47, is president. Their father is a graduate of the City College of New York and the St. John's University Law School. Others in the family are Mrs. Fields, and her daughter, Miss Jacqueline Fields, a teacher in Metuchen.

He also was a founder and officer of the New Leader magazine; and had been legal adviser to the National Labor Committee for Palestine; the Jewish Frontier magazine; and the United Hebrew Trades, say the New York Times. A member of the administrative committee of the Jewish Agency for Palestine under the old League of Nations, he had been chairman of the People's Relief Committee for War Sufferers, a trustee of the Palestine Economic Corporation, and a director of Hias, the Hebrew Immigrant Aid Services.

CLASS IN COOKERY

CHOCOLATE CHIP OATMEAL COOKIES

one-half cup margarine or other shortening one-half cup granulated sugar one tablespoon water three-quarters cup flour
one-half teaspoon salt
one cup chocolate chipits
one-half cup brown sugar one egg
one-half teaspoon vanilla one-half teaspoon baking soda one-quarter cup nuts
one and one-half cups oatmeal

Cream margarine, brown sugar, and granulated sugar. Add beaten egg, water, and vanilla. Add oatmeal, chopped nuts, and chocolate chipits. Add flour, salt, and baking soda which have been sifted together twice and mix well. Drop batter by teaspoonfuls on a greased cookie sheet. Bake at 350 degrees for fifteen minutes.

Mrs. L. Cass,
5617 Rand Avenue, Montreal.

TAIGLACH

two and one-quarter cups flour
one-eighth teaspoon salt
one teaspoon baking powder four eggs
one-half teaspoon nutmeg one teaspoon powdered ginger two cups filberts (or others nuts except peanuts) four tablespoons salad oil one pound dark honey three-quarters cup brown sugar
one cup candied cherries

Sift flour, salt, and baking powder into a bowl. Make a well in the centre, drop eggs and oil into it, and work into flour, mixing until a dough is formed. Break off pieces of dough and roll into pencil-thick strips. Cut into one-half inch pieces and place on a lightly greased cookie sheet. Bake at 350 degrees for twenty minutes or until browned. Shake the pan once or twice. Cool. Then cook honey, brown sugar, ginger, and nutmeg for fifteen minutes. Drop the baked dough in it and cook for five minutes. Add the nuts and cook ten minutes additional, stirring frequently. Test the mixture by dropping a little on a wet surface; if it holds together, it is done; if not, cook until it does. Turn it out onto a wet board and let cool until easy enough to handle. Then shape into three-inch balls, between moistened hands. Decorate with the candied cherries, if you wish.

Proposed Reconstructionist Guide Departs From Code Of Jewish Law In Various Ways

Reconstructionists will meet in Chicago May 14 to 17 to set up their second ritual guide for Ritual Practice.

In preparation for the conference, Reconstructionist president, Rabbi Ira Eisenstein, has drafted a proposed guide which has been circulated to all the Reconstructionist groups (Congregations and Havurot) for consideration.

Reactions to the first draft have been received and a revised draft will be presented to the conference for final ratification.

The Reconstructionist Movement is an outgrowth of the Conservative movement and favors a relaxation of certain traditional observances.

The guide suggests departure from the traditional code of Jewish law in many ways. The Conservative Movement as a whole follows the Shulchan Aruch (code of Jewish Law) except in those instances where its Committee on Jewish Law has interpreted otherwise.

Such early findings permitted mixed pews and use of the organ in the Synagogue. These interpretations were made under the chairmanship of the late Prof. Louis Ginsburg.

Later interpretations also permitted the eating of broiled fish where kosher foods were unobtainable, riding to the Synagogue where health reasons made it inadvisable to walk, and the issuance of the new ketubah whereby the groom is forced by his own premarital contract to issue a religious divorce to his wife in the event the marriage becomes insupportable.

The Reconstructionists include in their membership adherents from both the Conservative and Reform Camps and thus may be bridging the gap between the two movements. The groups parted company as a result of the Pittsburgh Conference of American Rabbis convoked by Dr. Kaufman Kohler in November 1885.

The pronouncements of the Pittsburgh Platform which gave the greatest offense to the traditional leaders were those which claimed the right to modify the ceremonies, to reject the dietary laws and similar institutions and to abolish all reference to the sacrificial cult and a return to Palestine. Additional antagonism was aroused by discussion at the conference in which views were expressed favoring Sunday services and the admission of proselytes without circumcision.

The reaction against the Pittsburgh Conference was immediate. The recognized leader of the forces of tradition was Dr. Sabato Morais, minister of Mickve Israel Congregation, in Philadelphia. His cherished hope that the Hebrew Union College at Cincinnati, founded in 1875, might serve as the seminary for the training of all Rabbis, was shattered by the action of the Pittsburgh Conference in which members of the Hebrew Union College faculty participated.

Under the leadership of Dr. Morais, the Jewish Theological Seminary Association was organized in New York City in 1886. The preamble to the constitution of the Association stated that it was necessitated by the manifest need for associated and organized effort on the part of the Jews of America faithful to Mosaic Law and ancestral traditions.

The object of the Association was stated to be the preservation in America of the knowledge and practice of historical Judaism as outlined in the Law of Moses and expounded by the prophets and sages of Israel in Biblical and Talmudic writings.

The Jewish Theological Seminary of America was established with Morais as president. In his first report as president of the faculty, he said:

"At the basis of our Seminary lies the belief that Moses was in all truth inspired by the living God to promulgate laws for the government of a people sanctified to an imprescriptible mission, that the same laws, embodied in the Pentateuch, have unavoidably a local and general application.

"Those comprised in the first category lose their force outside of Palestine, the others are obligatory elsewhere but both the former and the latter, being of necessity broadly formulated, needed in all ages an oral interpretation.

"The traditions of the fathers are therefore coeval with the written statutes of the five holy books. That these truths have not been denied by any of the prophets, who succeeded Moses, that our sainted seers laid the greatest stress upon moral injunctions, simply because ceremonial observances were mistakenly regarded by many of their contemporaries as an exemption from the principles of social rectitude, the founders of the Jewish Theological Seminary held as their credo."

The first draft of the Guide for Jewish Ritual usage prepared for the Reconstructionist conference in Chicago points out that:

"Of those of us who have been trained to think of ceremonial observances as divine commandments or as part of a self-sufficient mystic law which is the essence of historic Judaism, the elasticity of the new approach will at first seem unsatisfactory. There is however no alternative. Modern thought acknowledges the propriety of the concept of law only in nature and in human relationships; in the sphere of ritual, of the relationship between man and God, there can be no law."

The proposed Guide adds: "A modern state is separated from any established church and refuses to legislate on matters of religious practice. In Israel religious usages are embodied into the law of the land only insofar as they have social repercussions, as, for instance, in matters of Sabbath observance, where it would be necessary to insure the opportunity for such observance to all who desire it and in marital law where the social efficacy of the home has to be protected."

For Jews who are satisfied with traditional codes and can find complete self-realization in their observance, it is pointed out, the proposed Guide would hold no message.

"Nor," it adds, "would it have a message for those Jews who see no good to be gained by identifying themselves with the Jewish people and its religious tradition. All other thinking Jews, however, should engage in the effort to arrive at a Jewish way of living which would insure both the survival of the Jewish group and the enrichment of their own lives as Jews.

"An example of an observance that is meaningful both in form and content is the public reading of the Torah. The class of observances that are arbitrary in form but significant in content is exemplified by the use of 'tefilin' or 'mezuzah.' Their significant purpose is to remind the individual Jew of his commitment to fulfill Jewish ideals as implied in the concept of Israel's covenant with God, of which they are symbols."

The Guide's proposal on "home devotions" highlights the point at which the Reconstructionist proposals differ from Conservative practices of praying with the head covered.

"The family," states the Guide outline, "should select a set period each day for the family devotions, preferably in the morning before minds are distracted by the demands of worldly pursuits. The male members of the family may don the 'tefilin' and 'talit.' Keeping the head covered lends a Jewish atmosphere but it is not indispensable.

"The devotion should include selections from the Hebrew traditional prayers (like the bar'ku and shema) as well as selections from other sources, Jewish and non-Jewish, so long as they express lofty ideals. Variety from day to day is essential while at the same time retaining some basic constant elements."

In regard to Sabbath observance, the Guide outline proposes preservation only of those rites which can be observed in consonance with the tempo of modern life.

"It must be noted," states the Guide outline, "that the prohibition of work on the Sabbath, though negative in form, contributes positively to the realization of those values that constitute the purpose of Sabbath observance. Our rule should be that only those activities should be forbidden on the Sabbath which tend to make us lose sight of the ends of our living in the pursuit of the means.

"The suggested conception of the purpose of Sabbath rest exempts from the category of prohibited work artistic pursuits engaged in purely as forms of self expression.

"What has been said of creative art applies as well to healthful play. Particularly children and youth find refraining from sport and play on the Sabbath not restful but irksome and enervating. Play may therefore be indulged in by adults and children on the Sabbath but not during the hours that are set aside for religious services or family meals. This proposal of course is at variance with Conservative practice."

The Guide points out that it is "inappropriate" to apply the prohibition of Sabbath travel to persons wishing to join their families at meals or to attend worship in the synagogue.

"The switching on and off of electric lights and the use of the elevator should be permitted," the Guide continues. "Refraining from such acts adds nothing to the Sabbath's power to help us experience life as worthwhile and in fact tends to make the observance of the Sabbath tedious and burdensome. The institution of the 'shabbos goy' which owes its origin to the meticulous observance of these and similar prohibitions, is offensive."

The lighting of candles to initiate the Sabbath need not take place at sunset, especially during the winter months, the Guide states, when the candles are likely to be entirely burned out before the family gathers for the Shabbat evening meal.

Regarding smoking on the Sabbath, the Guides states, "The traditional objection to smoking on the Sabbath is based on the Biblical command not to kindle any fire on that day. From a purely technical point of view smoking should not be considered more of a violation than turning on the electric light or the radio or TV. It is recommended that while smoking should be permitted, it should not be done in the presence of those who might be offended by it."

"In public institutions, like synagogues, centers, etc., public smoking should be prohibited," the Guide adds, "since there are likely to be present men and women who would be offended. However for the benefit of the invetorate smokers, there should be a room set aside to which they may resort for this purpose.

"All rules regarding kashrut must be considered as applying 'lekatchillah' (from the start, directly) but a mistake in the use of a dish or pot need not be considered as necessitating a special ritual or kashering.

"Since many housewives find the maintenance of separate sets of dishes for meat and dairy products a heavy burden and this distinction has no inherent value, even Jews who maintain it for their own homes need not refuse to partake of food in a home in which this distinction is not observed.

"Traditionally the festival (of Passover) was observed for two days at the beginning and two days at the conclusion of the week. The second day was known as the "yom tov sheni shel goluyot," the second day signalizing the fact that Jewry is in exile. With the establishment of the state of Israel this second day is no longer to be regarded as essential. The first and seventh days should be observed in the same spirit as the Sabbath.

"Wearing a head-covering during worship is not absolutely essential but it is recommended since tradition favors it and there is no ethical or esthetic reason for abolishing the practice. Where, however, the question of the covered head becomes a diviaive issue, the congregation should make the wearing of the "kippah" optional. There is no reason why worshippers cannot sit side by side in the same synagogue, some with bare heads and others with heads covered.

"Marriages may take place at any time except Sabbaths, festivals, and holy days. The observance of restrictions during the 'sefirah' or prior to Tisha B'av is optional. On the Shabbat immediately preceding the wedding, the couple should be called to the torah for an aliyah and the recitation of appropriate blessings.

"The plain gold band is preferred as the wedding ring. However, this is not essential. The double ring ceremony is also acceptable. An appropriate formula should be adopted to accompany the placing of the ring on the finger of the groom, since no traditional formula exists.

"The use of birth control devices is entirely legitimate. When a civil divorce has been obtained every effort should be made to obtain a religious divorce. When a spouse refuses to cooperate in a religious divorce and a Beth Din of three rabbis is satisfied every effort has been made by the suppliant spouse to obtain the religious decree, he may re-marry without it."

Brights FINE CANADIAN Wines
SINCE 1874

At your sabbath table, a decanter of wine is as much at home as a challah.

No wine is more welcome in Jewish homes in Canada than Mazel Tov, a wine made from Concord grapes grown on the sunny slopes of the Niagara Peninsula.

Mazel Tov is ruby red in colour, and richly sweet—but not cloying—to the taste. It's a wine you'll "remember", the kind of wine that you used to taste many years ago.

Mazel Tov, made 'Kosher l'Pesach' under strict rabbinical supervision, is available throughout the year for every 'simcha'.
